

ALEXEI VRANICH

Anthropologist & Archaeologist

Alexei Vranich PhD is an anthropologist and archaeologist who can comment about the historical viewpoint of any current event or news topic from natural disasters to travel trends, environment and human development. Best known for his friendly and approachable style, Dr. Vranich defies the stereotype of stodgy academician. He has bridged the divide between academic and popular archaeology through appearances on television and on the radio and in magazines such as National Geographic, The Sciences, and Archaeology Magazine, in addition to a variety of national and international newspapers. He has hosted a pilot for Discovery Channel and is currently working on several television specials. Dr. Alexei received his Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania and is currently a Research Associate at the Cotsen Institute of Archaeology where he is conducting active research in Peru and developing innovative approaches for the use of digital media in archaeology.

Alexei is bilingual Spanish and English. Conversant in Italian.
